From the President & CEO

Welcome to the Winter 2025 edition of Appassionato, where we reflect on a tremendous year and celebrate the wealth of remarkable achievements from our community. In this year's edition, the passion and dedication our community shares for music will come alive through a series of stories about beloved members of the academy, both past and present.

To kickstart the new academic year at VAM, we take a moment to remember former VAM violin faculty Gwen Thompson and the legacy she had on our community. Next, we check in with talented VAM alum Andrew Beer, who acts as concertmaster for the Auckland Philharmonia. We also shine a light on multi-talented VAM student Allan Crawford, who is balancing his passion for music with his talents in sports, where he recently represented Canada in an international badminton competition. These heartwarming stories culminate in a nostalgic edition of our bi-annual newsletter, where the endless possibilities fostered at VAM are reflected in past members who have helped establish the community we cherish today and the bright futures of the gifted musicians that currently grace our halls.

I humbly extend my deepest gratitude to each of you—our steadfast community. Your dedicated support to VAM and our broader mission of inspiring and nurturing a love for music is the cornerstone of our shared achievements. As we turn the page onto the next chapter in VAM's magnificent story, I am filled with hope and excitement for the future that we will build together.

Musically yours,
Joseph Elworthy

From the Board Chair

Dear Members of the VAM Family,

Welcome to VAM's bi-annual newsletter, Appassionato. As the Chair of the VAM Board, it is my privilege to connect with you through this enduring showcase of our community's accomplishments and inspirations.

At the Vancouver Academy of Music, our commitment extends beyond training accomplished musicians; we are dedicated to developing leaders and innovators across a spectrum of professions. Appassionato reflects this broader mission by celebrating the diverse achievements of our students and alumni, who excel not only in the music industry but in various fields around the world.

This newsletter highlights these significant accomplishments, illustrating the profound impact of a rich musical education on personal and professional development. Our stories inspire current students and faculty, encouraging them to explore and expand the boundaries of their own potential.

By sharing these narratives, we foster a culture of excellence and aspiration that is central to the VAM ethos. Each feature contributes to the ongoing story of our institution—a story marked by a passion for the arts and a commitment to fostering versatile, forward-thinking individuals.

Thank you for your continued support and involvement in our vibrant community. Together, we celebrate the transformative power of music and the remarkable achievements of our extended VAM family.

Kindest regards,
Monique Wilberg

VAM Remembers Gwen Thompson

March 30, 1947 - December 5, 2025

VAM fondly remembers a cherished member of our community, Gwen Thompson. Gwen was a remarkable violinist and served as the former head of the academy's violin department. Throughout her time at the academy and beyond, Gwen taught hundreds of upcoming musicians and became an icon and inspiration among students and faculty.

Gwen's musical journey began at the young age of four. She quickly progressed and was studying under Sophie Eckhart-Grammate by the age of 14. She spent each summer attending the National Yge of 16, she was accepted at Indiana University by Josef Gingold, one of North America's leading teachers. After graduating, she continued her studies and went on to UCLA and the Juilliard School of Music. Her talents soon coveted her a position teaching violin at Western University, where at just 22 years old she became the youngest person to hold a professorship in the music faculty at Western.

In 2004, Gwen was appointed to the Order of Canada in recognition of her remarkable teaching and overall contribution to music in Canada.

VAM's President and CEO Joseph Elworthy remarked on the lasting impact Gwen had.

“Gwen was a larger-than-life figure who balanced her propensity to speak her mind with a wicked sense of humour,” he said. “Gwen established standards for violin and string playing on an international scale. Gwen’s stamp of approval was analogous to any legendary teacher - such as her knowledge and her expectations.”

“Gwen is part of the Academy’s origin story. To this day, after hearing an outstanding VAM recital or masterclass, I ponder whether it would meet dear Gwen’s standards, which epitomize her lasting legacy.”

In her personal life, Gwen married Dr. Oliver Robinow in 1975 and they had two children, Richard Alexander Robinow and Elizabeth Louise Robinow. After she retired in 2006, Gwen and her husband moved to Victoria. Here, she helped establish the Township Community Arts Council in Esquimalt which provides support for gifted young musicians.

Gwen will be deeply missed as her legacy continues to shine on in the musical community and beyond.

Congratulations to VAM students who participated in Spring 2025 VAM Exams!

Alumni Spotlight: Andrew Beer

Andrew Beer is a force to be reckoned with in the world of classical music. For the past 11 years, he has served as concertmaster of the Auckland Philharmonia, using his talents in the violin to lead his fellow musicians in delivering the breathtaking performances for which the orchestra is known.

Before landing the coveted role of concertmaster, Beer spent many years honing his artistry at the Vancouver Academy of Music.

“It all started at the Academy,” said Beer. “It’s actually the school I went to the most because I went there from age five to 18. So, there’s no other school that had such a big impact on me.”

Beer studied with violin teacher Lawrie Hill for eight years and says her guidance was integral in shaping his musical development. Earlier this year, he even brought his eldest daughter for a lesson with Lawrie and noted how nostalgic it was to be back in her classroom.

“My oldest daughter started violin this year, so I said it would be so amazing if we could go back and have her play for Lawrie. And we did, and it was just like a time machine. It’s almost 40 years later, but she’s still got the same energy and presence in her room. It just reminded me that Lawrie’s amazing, and I wouldn’t be here without her.”

“I think at the beginning of every year, I was kind of asking my parents, ‘can I quit?’ And Lawrie said, ‘Oh, he’s got great ears. He’s got some promise, so he’s got to keep at it,’” Beer said. “She just gave me the passion and the love for it.”

Alongside Hill's encouragement, Beer says the Academy provided opportunities that broadened his musical world and pushed him to grow as a young artist.

“Remembering back to my academy days, you kind of just take it for granted as a kid, because you don’t know anything else, but actually it was so unique and special,” he said. “The orchestra probably started when I was 10, which is really young. Chamber music started, and then I did some string quartets, but also music history, harmony, and theory classes. It’s so good for shaping a complete musician.”

After studying at the Academy, Beer continued on to graduate school and then a fellowship at Carnegie Hall before securing his first orchestral position as second assistant principal of the second violins with the Montreal Symphony. It was there that he began building the leadership skills that would prepare him to become a concertmaster.

“At least a few times a year, I would have to lead the section. So I found it a great way to observe what it’s like to lead, and I found that it was a really good way to gradually get into a more leadership mentality,” he said.

Beer shared that two of the most important skills in being a successful concertmaster are being a good listener and excellent with time management.

“You’re always in the middle between the conductor and the musicians, so you kind of have to be almost like a negotiator or a translator. If what the conductor is trying to convey is not really getting across the positions, I can stand up and try to help with that,” he said.

“You have to be really good with time management, because things get busy. There’s all the playing, but there’s all the work outside of that - the meetings, the audition panels, and the bowings.”

“But I think being a good concertmaster always comes back to the number one thing - being really able to listen and adapt to help the orchestra play together better.”

Despite how naturally he now appears to lead, Beer said stepping into a leadership role wasn't something he was immediately comfortable with.

“I'm shy and being super social is maybe not my default, so it's kind of stepping out of my comfort zone and doing my best to check in with musicians on a regular basis,” he said. “Of course, some of the other musicians in the orchestra might also be shy, but then, if neither of us are communicating, there can be a bit of a feeling of emptiness. So, having to initiate things which I wasn't used to before has definitely been a learning and growth experience for me.”

Beer shared that consistently practicing and challenging himself helped him not only manage nerves but also evolve as a musician - advice he wants to share with the new generation of musicians.

“Just keep at it. Practice as hard as you can. Practice is the most important thing, but also play chamber music, play in an orchestra, go watch other people's concerts, support your colleagues,” he said.

“We're really lucky to do something that we love. Not everyone gets to do that. Always remember that, and use it to give you the fire and the adrenaline to find the energy that you need to practice and perform.”

Student Spotlight: Allan Crawford

At just 16 years old, Allan Crawford is proving that passion has no limits. Balancing music, robotics, and high-level sports, he has quickly distinguished himself as a multi-talented student, most recently earning a place on Canada's national badminton team and competing internationally.

Becoming a competitive badminton player wasn't part of Crawford's original plan. He was originally a swimmer, but when the pandemic hit five years ago and pools closed, he picked up a badminton racquet and quickly learned he had a talent for the sport.

"Just as a form of exercise, I started playing and then I found it really enjoyable. I started with an independent coach for about two years. I didn't really see myself getting into the competitive style of sport, but I ended up moving to a bigger club in Vancouver. I started playing these national tournaments in my third year," he said.

As his interest grew, so did his commitment. Crawford started training at least 15 hours per week on top of his schoolwork, orchestra rehearsals, and robotics tournaments. His hard work paid off. Last year, he won his first national gold medal in Quebec, and this year, he represented Canada in mixed doubles in the Pan American Junior Championship in Guatemala.

"I just felt really proud. Wearing Canada on the back of my shirt on court, it's not something you could experience every day," he said. "I've never played a sport and got to that level of being on the national team. I just took the moment in honestly, and it's something that'll be very memorable to me."

Allan Crawford representing Canada at the 2025 Pan Am Junior Badminton Championships in the mixed doubles category in Guatemala.

With high-stakes competitions and international crowds, Crawford learned to channel his nerves into powerful motivation.

“I enjoy having that nervous feeling on court, my heart pounding like out of my chest and stuff like that. It’s a very unique feeling that you can’t really get from anything else and learning how to harness that feeling and push down the pressure will help me in anything,” he said.

“The one main thing that I try to do to help push it away is thinking about what I have to do instead of what I shouldn’t do. Thinking about, ‘What’s my goal here?’ ‘What am I here for?’ That gives me something to look forward to instead of being worried about mistakes.”

This mindset doesn’t just serve him on the badminton court, it follows him into his life as a musician as well. Crawford has been studying cello at the Academy for 11 years with Joseph Elworthy, and learning French horn with Nick Anderson for the past five. He brings the same focus, discipline, and emotional openness to his music that he brings to his sport.

Similar to his experience in athletics, Crawford shared that playing music has also become a place where he feels he can express himself.

“I feel like in the cello I’m really able to express my emotions and feelings. It’s unique because it’s a big instrument and I’m a pretty tall guy, so just having a big instrument along with me kind of makes me feel like I can put my whole body into it,” he said.

Throughout his musical journey, Crawford has performed in various competitions, solo recitals, and with the Academy’s Symphony Orchestra. He shared that the community he has made through the cello has become an incredibly important part of his life.

“Joseph has been a really big part of my cello life, and honestly, a big part of my life in general. I have a really close relationship with him. He’s been my first teacher since I was five, and he’s been the person that motivates me to keep playing and is just a really great teacher,” he said. “I’ve also known a lot of people in VAMSO since I started cello. So, just seeing them weekly is also another motivator to keep me playing.”

Crawford has many hopes for the future. He hopes to pursue a degree in biomedical engineering while continuing to play badminton and the cello.

“I’m hoping to stay with cello, badminton, and everything in the future. Just having them as hobbies, especially post secondary, I think will keep me happy and relaxed.”
